Concord , CA – February 3, 2009 – Acro Associates, Inc. today launched the ACROSENSE™ Fluid Control Platform (FCP) product line. The platform brings cutting edge technology that enables efficient integration of standard and custom components for fluid system design. The ACROSENSE FCP now brings a solution to engineers to easily integrate components such as solenoid actuators, pinch valves, motors, pumps and feedback sensor devices when constructing a fluid control system or device. The product line is ideally suited for bioprocessing and medical device applications where it is typical to have a large number of components brought together into a networked controlled system.

The product line will be offered in several configurations that are formatted for meeting basic to complex fluid system design. The product line is also modular and scalable to meet any size, shape and performance needs. In addition to standard configurations offered Acro can also support, upon request, custom ACROSENSE FCP layouts. Commercial availability will begin in March followed by additional configuration releases running through August, 2009.
